Maryland's Historically Underserved Urban Communities Receive $8.6 Million to Plant Over 28,000 New Trees

By CELIA PARKER The Chesapeake Bay Trust

(August 18, 2025)—The Chesapeake Bay Trust (Bay Trust) continues to empower everyday people to restore nature, this time through local grants for community-led tree planting efforts to strengthen their own neighborhoods. With funding from the State of Maryland and BGE, over $8,677,000 was awarded to 26 community organizations to plant over 28,000 new trees in urban, historically underserved areas across Maryland. The Urban Trees Program was created by the Maryland General Assembly's Tree Solutions Now Act of 2021, which calls for five million trees to be planted across Maryland by 2031, 500,000 of them targeted to urban, underserved areas. The Bay Trust, known for managing funds from the "Protect the Chesapeake and Coastal Bays" vehicle license plate program and other sources, has long empowered local communities through its grantmaking and was tapped in the Act to serve as the administrator of the urban component. benefits to human health, clivironment. Yet some urban communities are severely lacking in greening, contributing to heat island effect, exacerbating asthma and other health issues, and reducing quality of life. Providing resources through ground-up, community-based grants empower people to own this piece of community improvement, leading to sustainability.

"Our unwavering commitment to fighting poverty, building more economically-vibrant neighborhoods, and advancing the work of repair requires intentionality—not only in the policies we craft, but also in the partnerships we uplift," said Gov. Moore. "Tree planting is critical to keeping our state resilient and healthy for all Marylanders. In partnership with the 5 Million Trees Initiative, we will continue our push for clean air, clean water, and thriving communities in every zip code, including those that have been historically left behind."

This is the fourth year of grants awarded through the Urban Trees Program to enhance quality of life, human health, and community livability. Funding over nine years will be distributed by the Bay Trust to communities, neighborhoods, civic groups, schools, and others who commit to planting trees in underserved regions as defined in Urban trees have significant the legislation. Awards are reserved for urban census tracts mate, the economy, and the en- with low median household income levels, with high unemployment, or that were historically red-lined or for public housing projects.

In addition to thousands of new plantings, new this year is a focus on the maintenance of these critical trees. Currently, there is no consensus about how much tree maintenance maximizes the ultimate number of mature trees. To determine how to optimize resource investment, the Bay Trust is implementing a study to compare the survival outcomes of trees that receive two years of maintenance with trees that receive five years of maintenance to determine optimal, cost-effective maintenance plans. "BGE is proud to support the Urban Trees Grant Program, as it ensures long-term, sustained solutions for communities across our State," said Valencia McClure, Senior Vice President of Governmental, Regulatory and External Affairs, for BGE.

"Enhancing Maryland, while empowering the public to help beautify and protect their own communities, is a fantastic reminder of the power of people to come together for the benefit of all."

Studies show that trees planted in urban communities improve the physical and mental health of people within their proximity, and that increasing urban canopy can reduce asthma and respiratory-related emergencies during heat wave-related events in under-treed areas. For these reasons, many urban communities have adopted urban tree canopy goals, including Baltimore City, which has set a goal of 40% canopy by 2037.

Governor Moore Announces New Program to Lower Electricity Costs and Improve Grid Resilience

By CARTER ELLIOTT Office of the Governor

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (August 11, 2025)—Governor Wes Moore today announced the debut of a newly rewired $2 million initiative to help lower electricity costs and improve grid resilience by making battery storage more accessible for Maryland residents and business owners. The Maryland Energy Administration will now cover the costs of purchasing and installing battery energy storage systems to promote the expansion of the promising clean energy technology statewide through the Residential and Commercial Energy Storage Program.

"While corporate greed continues to drive up energy costs for Marylanders, our administration is fighting to bring prices down," said Gov. Moore. "When we invest in clean energy, we help expand supply. When we expand supply, we help rein in utility expenses for everyone. Together, we are making Maryland more affordable, more resilient, and more competitive—all at the same time."

The Residential and Commercial Energy Storage program helps make battery storage more accessible to all Marylanders, supports local grid reliability, and advances the state's economic, clean energy and climate goals. Formerly offered as a tax credit, the Maryland Energy Administration has redefined this program to begin offering rebates due to the evolving needs of Maryland's residents and energy marketplace.

The new program is open to both residential and commercial applicants seeking to install qualifying battery energy storage systems, enabling more homeowners and businesses to store electricity for later use, such as during peak demand periods or power outages, and helps improve energy resilience and flexibility. By shifting energy use to times when electricity is cheaper, battery energy storage systems can help reduce monthly energy bills through time-of-use savings.

"The latest consensusbacked science is telling us that climate change is making storms on average about 20% more severe, which presents real and growing challenges to grid reliability and resource adequacy," said Maryland Energy Administration Director Paul G. Pinsky. "This new program will help support emergency preparedness and build resiliency for communities statewide, especially as extreme weather events become more frequent."

When paired with rooftop solar, battery energy storage systems allow Marylanders to store clean, locally generated power for use after sunset or during outages—maximizing the value of their investment and further reducing reliance on fossil fuels and accelerating Maryland's transition to a cleaner, more sustainable energy future.

For more information about the Residential and Commercial Energy Storage Program, please visit the program webpage at https://energy.maryland.gov/ Pages/Energy-Storage-Grant-Program.aspx.

AAA 'Steps Up' to Provide More Than a Million Meals

Annual Campaign to Address Food Insecurity Supports Maryland Food Bank

By RAGINA ALI

AAA

BALTIMORE, Md. (August 11, 2025)— According to Feeding America, food insecurity continues to be a major concern across the nation, affecting one in seven Americans. With that in mind, AAA Club Alliance remains focused on making a positive impact in local communities with its annual "Stepping Up for Hunger" campaign.

From August 11th through August 24th, AAA Associates will set out to walk, jog, or run 61 million steps and, when they meet that benchmark, the organization will donate 200,000 meals to local food banks through Feeding America.

Now in its sixth year, Associates have logged over 239 million steps through the Stepping Up for Hunger challenge resulting in AAA donating over one million meals to food banks across the country.

"As an organization, we strive to be there when it matters most; supporting the communities in which our Members and Associates live and work," said Amber Zionkowski, Manager, Corporate Social Responsibility for AAA Club Alliance. "Our two-week campaign enables our Associates to 'step up' and make a difference for those facing food insecurity in our local communities."

As part of the Stepping Up for Hunger campaign, AAA associates will be volunteering at the Maryland Food Bank next Thursday, August 21, packing and distributing food for those experiencing food insecurity.

AAA provides automotive, travel, and insurance services to more than 65.2 million members nationwide, over 80,000 members in Washington, D.C. and more than 1 million members in Maryland. AAA advocates for the safety and mobility of its members and has been committed to outstanding road service for more than 100 years. BACK TO SCHOOL: Protecting Kids' Mental Health This School Year (StatePoint)—From schoolwork and homework to friendships and extracurriculars to potentially dealing with difficult situations like bullying, there is a lot for kids to navigate during the school year.

Fortunately, efforts are being made to provide tools that help protect kids' mental health—and parents and teachers can be proactive about getting involved.

Preventing Bullying

Bullying is a direct cause of mental health issues and can be one of the major stressors kids face both at school and after hours due to the rise in cyberbullying. It's important that children treat each other with compassion, as unkind words and actions can have devastating effects on the long-term wellbeing of classmates.

Celebrating 10 years, Pilot Pen's "Erase Bullying for Good" initiative helps students, parents and teachers understand and stop bullying. Sales from Pilot's FriXion Clicker erasable gel pens support STOMP Out Bullying, the nation's leading nonprofit dedicated to this issue. In fact, Pilot's contributions to anti-bullying organizations between 2015-2025 will equal over $650,000, helping fund a variety of initiatives that are making communities a safer place for students.

The campaign recommends these tips to help erase bullying before it starts at your child's school:

- Advocate for the adoption of bullying prevention programs. This might include special teacher and faculty training, peer mentoring and "Bullying Boxes," where students can file anonymous reports of bullying.
- Institute wellness rooms, which are safe spaces where students experiencing distress can retreat and relax.
- Ensure your school actively celebrates both diversity and differences, and that all students are respected and valued. Establish programs that teach empathy, tolerance, kindness, acceptance and conflict resolution.
- Ask your school to establish internet use guidelines to educate students and help stop after-hours cyberbullying.
- Teach kids about the difference between being a bystander—someone who watches bullying happen—and being an upstander—someone who intervenes when bullying is taking place. Encourage them to be an upstander when it feels safe to do so and to report bullying when they witness it.

If you're experiencing bullying, or if you have a friend, child or student who is, lean on resources designed to help. Pilot's "Erase Bullying for Good" campaign and STOMP Out Bullying provide tools to help you react effectively to bullying when it happens and learn what to do next. To access these resources, visit powertothepen.com/erase-bullying.

Navigating Emotions

It's easy for students to get overwhelmed by the demands of their classes. Be sure that kids have the time and space outside of schoolwork to have fun, cultivate friendships and practice self-care.

Encourage hobbies like exercise, meditation, team sports and outlets for their creative expression like journaling, drawing and music. These activities can help kids build self-confidence and manage relationships; skills they need to be resilient in the face of stressful situations. Parents can help by establishing open lines of communication and equipping kids with tools that can encourage them to express themselves more freely and help eliminate some homework-related frustration. FriXion erasable pens made with thermo-sensitive ink technology write smoothly and erase cleanly, giving students the power to write, erase and rewrite anything from term papers to poetry, without tedious rewrites and with less stress.

Cultivating kindness and compassion in communities and giving kids the tools they need to build their self-confidence helps protect students' mental health and helps ensure everyone has a safe, healthy and successful school year.

Holding a Vision

A few months before the National Museum of African American History and Culture's official opening in September 2016, Dr. Rex M. Ellis, the museum's founding Associate Director for Curatorial Affairs, spoke to college-aged servantleaders who were preparing to teach in Children's Defense Fund (CDF) Freedom Schools® summer programs. The museum was the realization of a dream that had been a very long time coming, beginning more than a century earlier with Black Civil War veterans seeking a place to memorialize their contributions to our nation, and the ultimate work of constructing and completing the final vision seemed to mirror some of the stories shared inside its walls, requiring faith, determination, and persistence. Dr. Ellis described some of the joy and triumph his colleagues felt as they neared the finish line:

"When we began back in 2005, we had nothing. We had no building. We had no collections. We had no land to put a building on and very little money. We had a very small staff of about three people ... Many said it could not be done. 'How are you going to raise over $540 million and a building that you say will have over 300,000 square feet and seven stories? It's too much,' they said. 'It can't be done,' they said. 'It will certainly take more time to build, and what about collections? How are you going to find a world-class collection? Most of the stuff worth having museums have already collected. You're not going to get the good stuff." The audience began cheering as he kept speaking. "We've got Chuck Berry's Cadillac, but that's not all. We've got Maybelline, his guitar. But that's not all. We got hip-hop artist Chuck D's jacket. The original funkmaster George Clinton, we got his Mothership. We got Prince's tambourine. We got Nat Turner's Bible. We got Harriet Tubman's shawl. We got Radio Raheem's boombox from Do the Right Thing. We got a training plane flown -by Tuskegee Airmen. We got the Olympic torch that Muhammad Ali signed in the 1999 games in Atlanta, his head gear, his training robe, and on and on and on ... We never stopped believing that we could do it. We could build this museum. We could make it happen. We didn't give up, didn't turn back, didn't listen to those who said that we would fail, and the more people saw and experienced our belief, they caught the fever too."

He then explained how this alone should inspire this group of young teachers: "Believe me, if we can build a museum ... there's nothing that you can't do. There's nothing you can't reach. There's nothing you can't teach. But it begins with the vision, and it begins with a vision that maybe nobody else can see." That vision was made real in a transformational collection that has inspired and educated over 11 million visitors and helped light the way for the next generation of Americans since the day its doors opened.

Now, just this week, the National Museum of African American History and Culture was named as one of the first eight Smithsonian museums targeted for a "comprehensive internal review" by the current administration in order to "ensure alignment" with the vision laid out in President Trump's executive order on "Restoring Truth and Sanity to American History." The National Museum of American History, the National Museum of the American Indian, the Smithsonian American Art Museum, and the National Portrait Gallery are among the other institutions named on the initial list. Will Americans stand—or fall—for any ongoing attempts to edit, reframe, hide, or delete pieces of our shared cultural history? Or will the true stories of the vision, determination, exceptionalism, and contributions of all Americans remain firmly out in the light?

Trees from A1

Communities will begin planting trees supported through this round of funding this fall, concentrating on areas such as vacant lots or streets where native trees and resources are scarce. These trees will help to reduce the urban heat island effect, filter polluted stormwater, mitigate the effect of carbon emissions, reduce energy consumption and therefore energy bills, and improve air quality. Increasing tree quantity and quality in urban areas is a cost-effective way to strengthen the health of the Chesapeake Bay, provide urban wildlife habitat, help mitigate flooding issues, and stimulate local green jobs markets enabling families to work where they live and play.

"This program provides the opportunity for everyday people to lead on-the-ground greening efforts for their own communities," said Dr. Jana Davis, president of the Chesapeake Bay Trust. "We are proud to empower local groups to design tree plantings that strengthen their communities, inspire other residents to get involved, and create a ripple effect for a lasting impact."

Urban Trees Grant Program 2025 Awardees, Prince George's County:

Prince George's County Department of Environment, Prince George's County—$1,000,000 to plant 2,143 native trees in public spaces (such as parks, schools, open spaces of homeowners' associations (HOAs), and churches) across the County.

Prince George's County Department of Public Works & Transportation, Prince George's County—$1,000,000 for the Right Tree, Right Place Program to facilitate 4,000 native tree installations and follow-up maintenance.

Casey Trees, Prince George's
County and Montgomery
County—$936,023 to plant
2,000 trees over three years on public and private lands to reduce surface temperatures, lower utility costs, mitigate stormwater runoff, and increase access to outdoor recreation.

Maryland National Capital Park and Planning Commission, Prince George's County—$673,560 to transform an abandoned golf course into a public green space by planting over 10,000 trees.

10,000 trees.

Alliance for the Chesapeake
Bay, Baltimore City, Baltimore County, Howard County and Prince George's County—
$525,000 to partner with the Interfaith Partners for the Chesapeake (IPC) and the Patapsco Heritage Greenway (PHG) to plant 700 trees at faith-based institutions, schools, and other public spaces.

Global Health and Education Projects, Inc., Prince George's County—$201,286 to plant 320 native trees and develop a community-hosted tree-care education program.

Joe's Movement Emporium/World Arts Focus, Prince George's County—$200,000 to create more green jobs and plant 600 trees in Capitol Heights, District Heights, Bladensburg, Mount Rainier, Cheverly, Cottage City, and Colmar Manor.

Live Peace Tech Corporation, Prince George's County— $66,750 to plant 125 native trees in the Town of Cheverly and Camp Springs to promote environmental sustainability, improve local biodiversity, and foster a greater appreciation for nature.

Town of Cheverly, Prince George's County—$25,346 to plant 50 native trees within Town of Cheverly by working with residents to plant native trees on private property within underserved areas.

The Chesapeake Bay Trust (www.cbtrust.org) envisions a restored and protected Chesapeake Bay watershed and other natural resources in our area, from the Coastal Bays to the Chesapeake to the Youghiogheny River. We empower local community-based groups on the ground with the resources they need to take on a meaningful and measurable role in restoring forests, streams, rivers, bays, wildlife, and more in their own communities. Every year, the Bay Trust empowers about 400 groups by providing grants and technical assistance to accomplish environmental education, community outreach, and local watershed restoration projects. The Bay Trust is supported by the sale of the Protect the Chesapeake & Coastal Bays license plate; donations to the Chesapeake Bay and Endangered Species Fund on the Maryland State income tax form; donations made by hunters, fishers, and boaters in the Maryland online natural resource licensing system; donations from individuals and corporations; and partnerships with private foundations and federal, state, and local governments. The Bay Trust has received the highest rating from Charity Navigator for over two decades. On average, 90 cents of every dollar are directed to the Trust's restoration and education programs.

To Be Equal:

Nation's "Most Effective Anti-Poverty Program" Decimated to Fund More Tax Cuts for Billionaires

"It's just a given that a civilized society would want to take care of people who are struggling to put food on their table. To see that all unwound for the sole purpose of ensuring there was more money to give tax breaks to millionaires and billionaires is beyond unconscionable—it's cruel."

—New York Gov. Kathy Hochul

The Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program, formerly known as Food Stamp-s, has been determined to be "our nation's most effective antipoverty program for the non-elderly."

Prior to the COVID-19 pandemic, SNAP kept nearly 6.6 million people, including 3 million children, above the poverty line. A 2021 adjustment to benefits kept another 2.9 million people out of poverty.

Not only does every dollar invested in SNAP generate an estimated $1.80 in immediate economic activity, the long-term effect on young children who have access to SNAP is so dramatic that each dollar invested yields an astonishing $62 in value.

But none of that is as important to the Trump administration and its allies in Congress as tax cuts for billionaires.

The "Big Ugly Bill" passed by Congress and signed by the President last month will strip more than 22 million American families of some or all of their nutrition assistance. More than 3 million will be dropped from the program entirely in the first year.

This heartless and short-sighted transfer of resources from the most vulnerable to the very wealthiest will reverberate throughout the economy, bringing job loss and the failure of small businesses across the nation. Shifting costs from the federal government to the states could trigger tax increases or a complete termination of nutrition assistance in a state.

The effect on families of color, who are twice as likely to rely on SNAP as white families, is especially intense. More than two-thirds of the individuals that SNAP helped lift out of poverty in 2023 were people of color and nearly two in five were children.

The largest cut to SNAP in American history comes at a time when the Trump administration's misguided economic policies are creating an even greater need for nutrition assistance. Economic growth has slowed, prices are soaring, and unemployment—particularly Black unemployment—has surged.

In times like these, initiatives like SNAP are a bulwark against recession, helping families maintain purchasing power and keeping local businesses alive. Without them, our economy is weaker and less resilient.

The assault on SNAP in the reconciliation package comes from four directions:

- Reducing the federal contribution to states' SNAP programs, cutting federal funding for food benefits up to 25 percent, and administrative costs by half.
- Expanding SNAP's "harsh, ineffective, and red tape-laden" work requirement.
- Ending food assistance for 120,000 to 250,000 people with a lawful immigration status, including about 50,000 children.
- Cutting food benefits for people with low incomes by permanently freezing the cost of the Thrifty Food Plan, increasing the paperwork burden, and restricting deductions.

The Trump administration has tried to prop up support for its unpopular agenda with false claims about Americans who receive SNAP benefits. The majority of ablebodied, non-elderly SNAP recipients already are working: 89% of households with children and a non-disabled adult included at least one member who worked in the 12 months before or after receiving benefits. Undocumented immigrants, the administration's go-to scapegoats, have never been eligible to receive SNAP.

Allowing American children to go hungry so billionaires can get enormous tax breaks is immoral. It's also bad fiscal policy. SNAP supports local businesses, stabilizes communities, and invests in the prosperity of the next generation. Preserving and strengthening SNAP is not only a humanitarian imperative, but an economic one.

experience to camp.

Campers also received coaching in sectionals from CYSO String Orchestra Director Rob Stojakovich, Concert Orchestra Director Carlos Castrillón, Lily Hensler (band and orchestra teacher at Central Middle School and CYSO board member), and Vivienne Newberger (Assistant Camp Director). Under their guidance, students explored a variety of repertoire, strengthened their technical skills, and developed essential ensemble-playing and musical expression techniques.

The camp also provided opportunities for creativity, teamwork, and personal growth beyond rehearsals. Students participated in music theory sessions led by CYSO Executive Director Dane Krich, engaged in peer performances with constructive feedback, and enjoyed informal moments together over meals and games.

"The goal of this camp was not just to prepare for a concert, but to build community and inspire our young musicians," said Krich. "We were thrilled to see the students supporting one another, taking musical risks, and having fun while working hard."

The week culminated in a free public performance at St. Anne's Parish House, showcasing the students' progress after only a few days of intensive preparation.

The CYSO looks forward to making the Summer Camp an annual tradition and welcoming even more young musicians in the years to come.

For over three decades, the Chesapeake Youth Symphony Orchestra (CYSO) has fostered a passion for music among the youth of Annapolis and surrounding communities—creating the next generation of performers and music lovers. With distinguished conductors and pedagogues, a musically diverse offering of ensembles, and some of the best young instrumentalists that Anne Arundel County and surrounding areas have to offer, CYSO not only empowers its students to become lifelong lovers and performers of music, but also provides them with opportunities and memories that will last a lifetime.

Social Security Matters

Ask Rusty:

I'm Still Confused About Medicare Part A and Part B Enrollment

By RUSSELL GLOOR,

National Social Security Advisor at the AMAC Foundation, the non-profit arm of the Association of Mature American Citizens

Dear Rusty: I'm 64 and still working full time, and plan to continue working at least until I'm 70—it's a good job, and I enjoy it. My job comes with health insurance, so I don't really need additional coverage, but I understand I will be required to sign up for Medicare Part A anyway when I turn 65 next year. What I don't understand is Part B: A colleague of mine, who is a little older than I am, said she signed up for Part B because a penalty will be incurred if we wait until we retire from our jobs and actually need the additional insurance. I'm not sure she's right. Can you explain what I should do?—Signed: Confused About Medicare

Dear Confused: We're happy to assist you with understanding this. First, enrolling in Medicare Part A (coverage for inpatient hospitalization service) is mandatory to collect Social Security after age 65. If you do not plan to take your Social Security benefits yet, you can defer enrolling in Part A until you claim Social Security. But Medicare Part A is also free to those eligible for Social Security, so there is little reason not to enroll in Part A at age 65 and, when you claim Social Security, you will be automatically enrolled.

Part B, which is coverage for outpatient healthcare services (doctors, medical tests, etc.), is different. Part B is always optional because there is a premium associated with it (standard premium is $185/month in 2025), but nearly everyone over age 65 requires healthcare coverage. If, however, you are employed and have "creditable" healthcare coverage from your employer ("creditable" is a group plan with more than 20 participants), then you can defer enrolling in Medicare Part B until your creditable employer coverage ends. And you can do so without incurring a "late enrollment penalty" for enrolling in Part B outside of your Initial Enrollment Period (IEP). When your creditable coverage from your employer ends, you will enter an 8-month Medicare "special enrollment period" (SEP) which permits you to enroll in Part B

Thus, as long as your employer coverage is "creditable," you can defer enrolling in Part B without penalty. FYI, you can also enroll in Part B a couple of months prior to your employer coverage ending, asking that your Part B coverage starts when your employer coverage ends, to avoid any gap in healthcare coverage. Note you will likely need your employer to provide you with proof of creditable coverage when you later enroll in Part B.

A couple of extra thoughts:

- If you require prescription drug coverage when your employer coverage ends after age 65, you only have 63 days to acquire that drug coverage without incurring a "Part D" (drug plan) late enrollment penalty. So, if needed, you should not wait to get insurance coverage for prescription drugs after you employer coverage ends.
- If you now have a Health Savings Account (HSA) through your employer, you should discontinue any HSA contributions well before (perhaps as much as six months before) your enrollment in Medicare Part A. That's because Part A is not considered a "high deductible" insurance plan (a "high deductible" plan is a requirement for having a Health Savings Account). If you do not have an HSA, you need not be concerned about this. If you do, we can also provide you with more info on this.

Governor Moore Announces Third Round of Build Our Future Grants to Make Maryland's Economy More Competitive

By CARTER ELLIOTT Office of the Governor

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (August 18, 2025)— Governor Wes Moore today announced that applications for the Build Our Future grant program—a financial resource for innovative infrastructure projects that support eligible technology sectors—will open again on August 25. Funded at $7 million for FY 2026, the program's third round will provide matching grants of up to $2 million to projects that demonstrate a transformative impact in accelerating growth and innovation in the state's strategic industry sectors.

"When we invest in industries of the future, we grow the economy, attract greater private-sector engagement, and create new, good-paying jobs in every corner of Maryland," said Gov. Moore, "Our administration's flagship Build Our Future Grant program continues to fortify Maryland's economic strength and is central to our ongoing mission of generating new pathways to work, wages, and wealth for all.

Administered by the Maryland Department of Commerce, the program was established through Governor Moore's Innovation Economy Infrastructure Act of 2023, a key piece of the governor's plan to bridge the gap between vision and economic growth in Maryland. Eleven projects received approval for Build Our Future grants in June 2024, and ten projects were approved for the second round of funding in June 2025. The $15.9 million in program grants issued thus far have spurred $48.7 million in private capital investment and supported 655 new jobs.

"From cybersecurity training centers to wet lab space to advanced manufacturing facilities, previous Build Our Future grant recipients have been laying the groundwork for future innovation and success," said Maryland Department of Commerce Secretary Harry Coker, Jr. "We look forward to identifying and partnering with a new group of innovative projects working to move Maryland forward. The Moore-Miller Administration and the Maryland General Assembly recognize that investing in Maryland is good for business."

Grants may be awarded to private companies, nonprofit entities, local governments, or colleges and universities in Maryland. Eligible projects include cyber ranges, prototype manufacturing centers, research spaces, sensitive compartmented information facilities, and wet laboratories, among others. Several awardees have already completed their infrastructure projects, which support cyber workforce training, biomanufacturing, and development of new woodbased construction materials.

Applications will open on Monday, August 25, with an informational webinar to be held Thursday, August 21, at 10 a.m. Additional details, including webinar registration and eligibility terms, are available through commerce.maryland.gov.

5 Steps Students Can Take Toward Entrepreneurial Careers

(Family Features)—Entrepreneurship is a career goal for many working adults. Autonomy and personal satisfaction are just a couple of the benefits of running your own business.

It's a professional path about 3 in 5 teens would prefer over a traditional job, according to a survey by Junior Achievement (JA). Running a successful company depends on multiple factors, including a solid business plan, adequate startup resources and a receptive market, as well as a strong sense of responsibility, work ethic and ability to persevere under pressure.

Beginning to shape the skills and mindset necessary to flourish as an entrepreneur can begin well before entering the workforce. In fact, even students in junior high and high school can begin working toward entrepreneurial goals with these tips from JA, a nonprofit that inspires and prepares young people by delivering lessons in financial literacy, work and career readiness.

1. Select Electives Wisely

Students don't have to wait until they're in college to begin developing business skills and knowledge. If they have the ambition and drive to become an entrepreneur, they may find it beneficial to complement the classes needed for graduation requirements with electives that allow them to explore their interest in the business world. Some examples include accounting, marketing, finance, economics, psychology and computer science.

2. Make Part-Time Work Meaningful

Many students enter the workforce in high school to start practicing money management and contribute to expenses like gas and car insurance. While most jobs available to students are service oriented and fall outside the business world, it doesn't hurt to explore options that put students closer to their entrepreneurial ambitions. For example, local small businesses may be willing to hire someone eager to learn.

3. Take Part in Programs

Kids can challenge themselves by putting their knowledge into practice as realworld entrepreneurs. For example, JA's Company Program is an immersive program that fosters creativity, critical thinking and business acumen, offering students unique opportunities to explore the

during competitions that offer

learning opportunities.

Additionally, at the Future Bound competition (made possible through the support of businesses including Chickfil-A, Delta Air Lines, Pacific Life Foundation and Staples), participants took part in seminars and mentorship. The event featured four programs that empower students with entrepreneurship and financial literacy skills—the Company of the Year National Competition, the Social Innovation Challenge, the Titan National Competition and the National Stock Market Challenge.

4. Seek a Strong Mentor

Some of the best learning comes from emulating others who are successful in their fields. Meeting regularly with someone who serves as a role model can help students sharpen their vision for the future and learn from the experiences that propelled professionals into their current positions.

5. Define a Future Vision

Creating an inspiration board can help motivated students compile and organize ideas. This board, whether physical or digital, can serve as a source of inspiration and help motivate students to identify and overcome obstacles while working toward bringing their visions for careers as entrepreneurs to life.

Find more ideas to help students gain confidence and skills for future education and careers, and learn more about the competitions, at jausa.ja.org.

EarthTalk® Brain Fog Alert: Air Pollution Linked To Cognitive Decline

By Shashwat Mishra | August 9, 2025

Dear EarthTalk:

Does exposure to air pollution cause "brain fog"? -Mark H., Raleigh, NC

Exposure to air pollution has long been connected to respiratory and cardiovascular issues. More recently, researchers have found evidence that it may also impair brain function. Studies suggest air pollution is associated with cognitive decline, memory problems and short-term cognitive performance—what many call brain fog accentuating concerns about the effects of polluted air on mental clarity and brain health.

Air pollution is a combination of harmful gases and particles, such as fine particulate matter (PM2.5), carbon monoxide and nitrogen dioxide. These pollutants, frequently released by vehicles, industries and wildfires, can enter the bloodstream and access the brain. Research shows that high levels of air pollution are linked to heightened brain inflammation, interrupted neural connections and diminished oxygen supply, which may all lead to cognitive impairment. A 2025 study in Nature discovered that extended exposure to air pollution may hasten cognitive deterioration, especially among older individuals.

People exposed to elevated pollution levels usually experience symptoms like trouble focusing, memory issues and mental exhaustion. Dr. Caleb Finch at the University of Southern California, states, "The aging brain is vulnerable to air pollution." His studies show that exposure to pollutants might elevate the risk of neurodegenerative conditions like Alzheimer's disease. Kids and young individuals could also be in danger. The growing brain is especially sensitive to environmental toxins, and certain studies indicate that children subjected to elevated pollution levels might encounter decreased IQ scores and attention issues.

According to research from the University of California, Davis, polluted air is also associated with mood disorders like anxiety and depression, emphasizing how important it is to create cleaner environments in order to improve outcomes related to both physical and mental health.

Reducing the impact of air pollution on brain function necessitates joint efforts. Decreasing air pollution levels by implementing stricter emission regulations, expanding green spaces and encouraging cleaner transportation alternatives can aid in minimizing exposure risks. On a personal level, individuals can safeguard themselves by using air purifiers, refraining from outdoor activities during high pollution days, and promoting measures that encourage cleaner air policies. By lowering pollution exposure, we can make great strides in protecting brain health for upcoming generations.
